

ABSTRACT

This study analyzes the implementation of public policy Rwanda Vision 2020 during the Paul Kagame administration in Rwanda. Rwanda Vision 2020 is a long-term strategic plan that aims to transform Rwanda from a low-income country to a middle-income country through various economic, social, and political reforms. This study uses a qualitative method with a descriptive-analytical approach, collecting data through literature studies, in-depth interviews, and analysis of policy documents.

The results show that the implementation of Rwanda Vision 2020 has achieved significant progress in infrastructure, education, health, and improving the quality of life of the community. Policies implemented under Paul Kagame's leadership, such as modernizing the agricultural sector, increasing access to education and health, and infrastructure development, have succeeded in driving economic growth and reducing poverty levels substantially.

The conclusion of this study is that although Rwanda Vision 2020 has succeeded in achieving many of its main objectives, there is still work to be done to ensure that the benefits of development are felt evenly by all levels of society. Rwanda's long-term success will depend on the government's ability to address these challenges and continue inclusive and sustainable reforms.
